AN ART OUTING TO AUCKLAND

Members of WSA accepted an offer from the President of the Friends of the Waikato Art Museum to join them on a bus outing to The Pah (TSB Wallace Art Gallery) and Te Tuhi the Pakuranga Gallery and Community Arts Centre on 20 October.

Our first call was the new TSB Wallace Gallery in the magnificent old Pah homestead situated in the Monte Cecelia park with views about the surrounding Auckland volcanic cones. Sir James Wallace, who has been collecting the works of established and emerging artists since the early 1960s has collected over 5,000 art works and they are now housed in Rannoch house, The Pah (opened in August 2009) and (to the envy of Hamilton) in the just opened Wallace Gallery in Morrinsville. This latest gallery houses art in thirteen rooms with a number of sculptures outside. The high ceilings make for a great gallery atmosphere. We then moved on to the Te Tuhi Gallery in Pakuranga.

SOLARPLATE WORKSHOP FOR WAIPRINT 2010

Our guest artist for this year's WaiPrint exhibition is Auckland artist Susan Hurrell Fieldes. Her beautiful monotypes in the WaiPrint exhibition are a reflection of her response to 9/11.

We have one place left in her two-day 'Introduction to Solarplate' workshop scheduled for 4/5 December, just after the exhibition opens, and a couple of spots in the second workshop on the weekend of 22/23 January. Thanks to a grant from HCAC, we've kept the cost down to only $125 for two days.

To register or find out more about the workshops, please contact Janice Meadows directly at

A COROMANDEL NATIVITY

Campbell Smith returned to live and teach in Waihi. While overseas he enjoyed looking at paintings of The Nativity in the National Gallery, London. "All The Nativities were set completely, in their own land. So I thought why not a New Zealand one? Way back in 1958, the year I joined the WSA. I set about Our Nativity in 33 poems and 17 engravings with the Holy Family moving from Opoutere to outside of Waihi. THE JOURNEY is published by Steele Roberts and will be available at ARTSPOST from 10th December. Price $25.

It too displays objects outside, but inside the emphasis is on contemporary art. The outside art is dominated by the "Atarangi II" the work of Michael Parekowhai who will represent New Zealand at the Venice Biennale next year. The work is based on the Cuisenaire rods that represented numbers by colour and length and are now being used in the teaching of languages. Perhaps, and certainly for me, the most impressive work inside was "The Future Trilogy" a suite of films based on the opening, in 2005, of a new IKEA store in London at which a near riot of 6000 people ensued because of the cheapness of the furniture offered at the opening. The subsequent futuristic film explores a totalitarian state creed, a rural cult uprising and an industrial wasteland. These outings make for a great day – relaxed and informative with good company. I've even known them to start with a glass of champagne.

PRESIDENT'S COLUMN

I keep saying that I've written my last column, but I keep getting pulled back.

I am currently acting or interim president and I still try to represent WSA in public arenas. I attended three of the interesting public forums on the future of Hamilton held at the museum. I am meeting with Chris Finlayson, the Minister of Art and Culture on the first of December. I am arranging a meeting with our new mayor, Julie Hardaker. If anyone wants to attend with me, please give me a ring.

I have enjoyed several exhibitions recently. The James Webster exhibition at ArtsPost, which finishes at the end of November, is outstanding. I've been telling people to go see it since I dropped in. It is a mix of painting, carving and witty conceptual work. This is an artist on the way up.

I enjoyed the opening exhibition at Greenslade Gallery. Many of the works are by well-loved local artists; but displayed in the unique setting of an iconic colonial building, they demonstrate how well contemporary works look in a domestic setting.

I also enjoyed the small but perfectly formed Shelf Exhibition in the Framing Workshop on Silverdale Road. Quite a few local and regional artists have created miniatures to fit on small shelves. Some are witty, some are challenging, and some are beautiful.

There are a number of exhibitions recently that I very much wanted to see but family circumstances have prevented. I have heard that the recent Maungatautari exhibition at Inspirit was outstanding and some of the works are still being displayed.

As well as a president, WSA needs someone who will take charge of fundraising: grant writing and sponsorship, as well as running a donations campaign for the WSA Charitable Trust. Please let us know if you can help.

In the last month we have received a number of compliments about the newsletter. One was from a major sponsor who enjoys the interesting content. We send regular newsletters to our sponsors and it is gratifying to know that they are read. Another was from an artist recently returned from abroad, who appreciates notices about competitions and open exhibitions as she looks for places to display her work. If anyone hears of exhibitions, competitions or galleries open to WSA members, let us know so we can place the information on our website and in the newsletter.

INSPIRIT GALLERY - TAMAHERE

'Endangered' is over now but some works will remain at Inspirit.

Here are some comments courtesy of Phillipa Stephenson who edits "Tamahere Forum".

'Endangered' was opened with an inspiring address by Maungatautari Trust ecologist Chris Smuts-Kennedy who predicted that within 10 years rare, breeding kakapo would be in residence on the mountain.

He questioned why natural creations were not valued as much as human ones.

"We put a huge value on some of the art we have created," Smuts-Kennedy said, citing the Mona Lisa, Monet's water garden series and 'creations' such as the Taj Mahal and the Sistine Chapel. The latter would be impossible to value outside their history and context.

"But what if a colony of very rare, endangered, large and beautiful snails – and their whole unique ecosystem on a single remote Nelson hilltop – were threatened by a mining operation? That piece of work had been created by many millions of years of 'Evolution'. The Mona Lisa can theoretically be painted again – but that entire ancient and complex community of interacting life-forms will be lost forever.

"This year, 2010, is United Nations' International Year of Biodiversity, a celebration of life on earth, which is also designed to promote the value of biodiversity to humanity," Smuts-Kennedy said.

"Many endangered species and their habitats are being fatally chewed by rats (and other such human impositions on this country's wildlife) – but the outcry is relatively faint, and the rescue-money is scarce." he said

"Opened on Friday, October 29 at Tamahere's Inspirit Art Gallery, Endangered, drew together Waikato's top artists, working in a range of mediums, to express the deep green ethos they've found at Maungatautari.

Artists like Joan Fear were quick to offer their support for the Endangered exhibition and many of the artists involved made special visits to Maungatautari to get to the heart of what makes it so special and inspiring.

On visits they encountered noisy kaka, kakariki, takahe and hihi on the tracks as well as fantail, tui and keruru. The ancient native trees, which provide shelter and food for the many species of birds that thrive at Maungatautari, also inspired the artworks.

Inspirit was transformed inside and out for the exhibition with works including paintings of kakapo, kaka and takahe by Joan Fear, Santie English, Ann Gray, Rachel Olsen, Jane Galloway, Airdrie Hamilton, and Renata Pryznoga-Cousins, a large metal moa sculpture by Marti Wong, an engraved marble egg sculpture by Jocelyn Pratt, a fairy tern mobile by Nick Dryden, heron and godwit sculptures by Bruce Young, sculpture by Rob Kear and Anna Korver, recycled metal art by Chris Meek, wearable art by Ginger, Shikoba, and Christine Rabart, cast glass by Colleen Ryan-Priest and Di Tocker, printmaking by Kate Hill, Sue Roots and Robin Cuff, a falling leaf chair by Robin Cuff, and humpback whale mother and calf, cypress and shell by Peter Radley.

Also in the exhibition were photographs by Phil Brown, an unsung hero of Maungatautari, mixed media works of the native kokopu (fish) by Cameron Suisted, ceramics by Ian Webster, Clare Wimmer, Mike Cogswell and Helen Frost, fibre art by Dianne Dudfield and Jane Siddall, and mosaic by Justine Martin." said Phillipa Stephenson

Many WSA Artists supported this very worthwhile cause. It was a great exhibition. Ed.

NZ PAINTING AND PRINTMAKING AWARDS

We are thrilled at the record number of entries this year. We have had 318 entries with the majority of them coming from the Auckland, Waikato, Wellington and Canterbury regions.

Out of the 318 entries 53 were WSA members with one of those members coming from out of the region. These numbers do include multiple entries from members so approx 30 members entered. The fifty finalists have been chosen with nine from the greater Waikato region.

We would be delighted if anyone could assist us again in the docent duties that will cover the period from 19 February through to the 3 March.

Also anyone who would like to assist with the packing up of the art works on the final Friday.

Please feel free to phone me on 07 855 9133 or 021 059 0028 or Maree Glass 021 322 575

The Executive of WSA would like to invite expressions of interest in holding another series of Arts.Biz workshops in 2011; covering areas such as "Marketing on a shoe-string", "Pricing Your Art" .

Please contact WSA office if you would be interested in attending the workshops.
